Accountability Reviews seek to assess the degree to which a project meets Oxfam’s standards for accountability. Drawing on a number of data sources, external consultants consider and reach judgements on both Oxfam’s mutual accountability in our partnerships, and Oxfam and partners’ shared accountability to those it works on behalf of.

For details on evaluation design, see the ‘How are effectiveness reviews carried out?’ document, and the full report for how these designs were tailored by individual reviews.

Key Commitments

The Tanzania team are committed to further involving community structures and local leaders as well as marginalized groups, in the implementation of this and Oxfam’s related Chukua Hatua project. Both projects will also extend civic and voters’ education to local government leaders. In Chukua Hatua active citizen animators will be identified from communities so that there is close collaboration between them and local leaders.

For Fahamu, Ongea, Sikilizwa, elections toolkits and publications will be developed in English and Swahili for use of populations outside the project area. Elections toolkits will also be made available in Braille and distributed in all 20 regions where the project is implemented. Citizens’ stories will be uploaded onto a public election website in English and Swahili, and all project documentation will be kept on a shared drive and available to all staff. Project ‘contact’ people will be identified at district level. Text messaging and social media will be used to gather feedback from partners and community members. The project consortium will work with local leaders and the media to increase awareness of their responsibilities in preparing citizens and duty bearers for election day. Joint monitoring by all consortium members will be undertaken, at times this will include DFID and USAID.

A cross-programme learning tour will also be organized to allow the team to learn from other programmes.
